January is National Blood Donor Month...

Blood donations are desperately needed to save the lives of millions of people. Unfortunately, blood banks have been emptied of their life-saving blood supply and need people to give blood. For more than 50 years, January has been recognized as National Blood Donor Month. Why January? January is typically a time when Red Cross blood donations are at their lowest due to a rise in winter weather and seasonal illnesses. To remedy this problem, people with every blood type are encouraged to make Red Cross blood donations.

Donating blood takes just a few minutes, you barely feel a thing, and you get snacks as soon as you're done. Best of all is the good feeling you get from helping others survive. See why blood donations are vital and whether you're eligible to give blood, along with precautions to take before giving blood, and the different types of donations. You may be surprised how giving blood can give you so much in return.
